

BABY STOLEN FROM CRIB GIVES ALARM

Little One Awakened by Kidnapping Father Cried and Pursuit Was Quick.

The wall of a frightened baby, suddenly awakened from sleep, betrayed a bold attempt at kidnapping in Long Island City last night and led to the arrest of Timothy Hannigan, of No. 79 Tenth avenue, Manhattan, on a technical charge of disorderly conduct.

Hannigan had attempted to kidnap the baby, but the fact that it is his own child and he is not legally separated from his wife saves him from a charge more serious than that under which he rests.

Some two years ago Hannigan married Annie Vogel, of No. 745 Eleventh avenue, Long Island City, one of the prettiest girls in Queens County. The baby, a boy, arrived in due time, but the married life of the Hannigans was not happy and two months ago the young wife, with her infant, returned to the home of her mother.

She neither saw Hannigan nor heard from him until yesterday, when he appeared at her mother's house. He had fortified himself with liquor courage on the way and was in an ugly mood. His wife refused to go back to him, and after threatening to blow up the house with dynamite he left. Later in the day a neighbor reported that he had seen Hannigan returning to Manhattan by way of the Thirty-fourth street ferry.

The baby was asleep in a crib in a room on the ground floor of the house late last night and Mrs. Hannigan, her mother and other members of the family were in the parlor discussing the visit of Hannigan. Mrs. Vogel, seated near the door, heard the baby cry and ran to investigate.

The crib was empty. The coverings were strewn about the floor. The window was open and it was apparent that Hannigan had entered the house and was running away with the baby.

Robert Vogel, a brother of Mrs. Hannigan, did some hurried thinking. He figured that Hannigan would try to reach Manhattan, using either the Thirty-fourth street ferry or the ferry from Astoria to Ninety-second street. A telephone message to the Astoria police station sent Policeman Joseph Brown hurrying to the ferry landing, while young Vogel took a car for the Thirty-fourth street ferry. Just as Brown reached the ferry-house in Astoria a man carrying a bundle under his coat hurried across the ferry-boat Bowery Bay. The policeman investigated. The man was Hannigan and the bundle was his baby, sound asleep. Brown arrested Hannigan and took him and the baby to the station house. In a few minutes the whole Vogel family had recovered the infant and the father was under lock and key. Magistrate Conorton held Hannigan in $200 bail for further examination.

FOUR CHILDREN BITTEN BY DOG

Mongrel Attacks Little Ones at Play on West Side Street.

Four children were bitten by a mongrel dog that appeared with foaming jaws first at One Hundred and Sixty-first street and Amsterdam avenue, last night, and pursued the screaming children.

Those bitten were William Wall, of No. 111 West One Hundred and Sixty-fifth street; Thomas McGinnity, of No. 207 Amsterdam avenue; Emil Katz, of No. 218 Amsterdam avenue; and Alvin Carter, of No. 284 Amsterdam avenue. The wounds were cauterized by Dr. Neugart, of the Washington Heights Hospital.

Patrolman Brady, of the West One Hundred and Fifty-ninth station, after a chase of several blocks, shot the brute.

The dog is believed to have been "mad."

TWO UNDER ARREST FOR CUE MURDER

Captured on Bowery, Prisoner Puts Slaying of Saloon Man on Comrade.

John O. Welsh, twenty-three years old, who saved his life by fleeing from the sixth-story window of the saloon at Chappelle, twenty-four years old, of No. 622 Eagle avenue, the Bronx, were arrested in front of No. 128 Houston street by Detectives Winer, O'Rourke and O'Neil, of the Bronx Detective Bureau, and locked up at the Bronx Detective Headquarters early to-day charged with the murder of Ferdinand Spreckels on the night of March 20.

Spreckels, who was the proprietor of a saloon at Westchester and Eagle avenues, was found in the billiard room at the rear of the saloon early on the morning of March 31 dead, with his skull crushed in and a bloody billiard cue lying on the floor beside him. The police learned that there had been a row in the saloon that night and that Welsh and Chappelle were the last to leave the place.

Chappelle and Welsh left town and returned yesterday. Under the pressure of the third degree Chappelle is said to have stated that at the conclusion of the row in the saloon, which started between Spreckels and Welsh over money the latter owed the saloon-keeper, he and Welsh left the place. They had proceeded but a block, according to Chappelle, when Welsh discovered that he had left his rubbers in the saloon and went back. Chappelle says he waited outside and heard sounds of a struggle. He looked through the glass door of the billiard room and, according to the police, saw Welsh knock Spreckels down with a cue and kick him on the head. Then Welsh came out and they ran away.

BLAZING CHILD RAN THROUGH STREET

Her Dress Caught Afire by Playmate Tossing Lighted Match in Fold.

There was a lot of little girls playing in Willett street, in the heart of the east side, to-day. Somewhere they had got hold of a box of matches. One of them lit a match and threw it from her. The match struck in the fold of the thin cotton slip of Pauline Kuttner, six years old.

A tongue of flame ran along a seam of the flimsy garment the child screamed and the others ran. She ran too, with her gait fanning the fire in her clothing to the tenement at No. 161 Willett street, where she lived on the top story.

When she reached the second floor landing she began to stagger. Mrs. Mina Shapiro, an old woman, heard her cries and ran out in the hall. The child's hair was all ablaze by that time and her garments were mostly charred away. With her bare hands Mrs. Shapiro plucked away the shreds of burned cotton and slapped at the little girl's head until she had the fire all out. Then in her arms she carried Pauline downstairs and to a drug store at Rivington and Willett streets. The clerk covered Pauline's blistered little body with sweet oil.

Somebody turned in a fire alarm and engines came clattering and added to the excitement about the drug store. The victim's mother, Ella, ran about like a wild woman, tearing her hair. A policeman got an ambulance from Government Hospital, but Mrs. Kuttner would not consent to having her child taken away from her. The surgeon thought the little girl was probably fatally burned.

There is one other child besides Pauline—a boy two years old.
